The Gray Head

Denny Petrillo

*“A gray head is a
crown of glory;
It is found in the way
of righteousness”
(Proverbs 16:31)*

I love this verse (I'll let you figure out why). The gray head is an indication of an achievement. He (or she) has made it long enough to have seen the hair go from its original color to the beautiful color of gray. That gray head is a “crown of glory.” Crowns represent something that is beautiful. In Proverbs 4:9, wisdom is personified as a woman. This “wisdom woman” does the following: “She will place on your head a garland of grace; She will present you with a crown of beauty.” So, the gray head should be seen as something beautiful. Crowns also represent authority. Kings wear crowns (2 Kings 11:12; 1 Chron. 20:2). The gray head then demonstrates that the one with it is deserving of honor and respect (Leviticus 19:32). Later Solomon will say, “The glory of young men is their strength, And the honor of old men is their gray hair” (20:29).

Of course, there are some gray heads that are nothing but fools. Their years of life have not really taught them anything (cf. Hosea 7:9). This is why Solomon goes on to add that their crown was earned “in the way of righteousness.” Their experiences have led them to one monumental conclusion: live according to God's divine standard!

Today we struggle with two tragic applications to this verse.

First, we frequently do not honor our aged. We live in such a youth obsessed world. We do anything we can to hold on to youth. Meanwhile, those with the gray hair are pitied rather than exalted. They are ignored instead of heeded. How much has our society lost by turning over things to the young? How much has been lost by failing to tap into the wisdom and experience of the aged?

Second, for a few dollars you can buy a box of gray hair coloring. As a result, there might be (and many times are) young women – or men – who are sporting gray hair. Solomon would argue that they haven't earned that. Gray shouldn't be a fashion statement. It should be a statement of maturity, experience and wisdom.

Each of us determines whether this verse will accurately describe us (or describes us now). Are we righteous? Are we making a determined effort to live according to God's word and to imitate Christ? If so, we've earned that gray head.
